Sands created individual crowns made out of white gold — which is different than a typical removable grill placed on top of the teeth for a short period of time — and worked with a jeweler to individually place and shape each diamond into a specific dimension. It took more than a month to craft the look and cost $250,000.

However impossible it may seem, Edwards' sparkly new smile is permanent. "Of course his teeth are still under there. Like with any crown or veneer, the tooth underneath needs to be reshaped to make room for the new veneer or crown," Sands told Page Six Style exclusively. "Crowns and veneers are not reversible. If the patient ever wants to remove the crown or veneer, they would have to have it replaced with another crown or veneer."

As for upkeep? According to Sands, maintenance includes brushing and flossing as normal and finishing the routine with a diamond polish.

Rose certainly seems up to the task of taking care of her boyfriend's teeth for the long haul. "I'm Soooo gonna let him get me pregnant again," she wrote on Instagram.
